Parashat SHELAH... The story of the twelve spies in Shelah is an example of the close connection between self-perception and human potential. Upon returning from the Promised Land, ten of the spies bemoan their fear of the land's "mighty" inhabitants. They tell the people, "We looked like grasshoppers to ourselves, so we must have looked to them". The Israelites were not allowed to enter the land not because they could not conquer it, but rather because they could not overcome their self-doubts.
